Gold Kennedy 'half dollar' is only half the size of a dime

By Roger Boye

This week's column answers more questions from Chicago Tribune readers.

Q—I'm tempted to order a solid 14-karat gold Kennedy half dollar. It's advertised at $10 plus $2.50 for postage and is dated 1963-1993 to commemorate the 30th anniversary of the Kennedy assassination. What do you think?

H.N., Chicago

A—Each "half dollar" measures 9 millimeters, about half the diameter of a dime, and contains less than $3 worth of gold. Also, the company that issued the items has no connection with the United States Mint. You would be buying a miniature round—not a real half dollar as the ad might suggest.

Q—I found a cache of old U.S. one-cent pieces in my grandfather's basement, including pennies dated 1822, 1833 and 1836, all larger than quarters. The coins are worn. Would they cover the down payment on a new car?

B.M., Orland Park

A—No, but they might pay for your first fill-up. Many U.S. cents from the early 1800s—including the three you listed—sell for no more than $10 each in "good condition." Rare-coin prices are governed by the law of supply and demand, rather than a coin's age, and relatively few people collect the "large cents."

Q—My husband has started collecting coins again after a 20-year lapse. What would make a good gift for him?

T.P., Evanston
